

Continued regulation of broadband services, particularly those for small business and consumers, is very important for the health of the Internet, innovation in the ISP industry, and my own family's welfare -- I'm a Senior System Administrator at a regional ISP. If Telcos are able to lock out independent providers from their networks these providers will be squashed - all that will be left is a duopoly of mediocore service by the Telco and Cable monopolies. Closing the Telco networks will do nothing other than make them richer than they already are.
